The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-4 and 6-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable Arslain et al in view of official notice. Arslain discloses a temperature control apparatus for a PWM device having a temperature detector 108 around the PWM device and a programmable driver 100 that in response to the temperature being greater than a maximum limiting temperature reduces the frequency of the PWM in a step amount and when the temperature is no longer at a high temperature the control returns to the normal frequency (see col. 4, lines 25-42 and col. 5, lines 4-22). Official notice is taken that the provision of a temperature dead band between which no control action is taken in temperature controls in order to prevent rapid switching back and forth is well known in the art. Accordingly, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have modified the system of Arslain such that it included the provision of a temperature dead band between which no control action is taken. The provision of adjustable set temperatures and frequency step amounts in the programmable driver 100 is considered to have been an obvious matter of programming flexibility into the control means based upon the specific needs of a given application.

Claims 5 and 10 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over as Arslain et al in view of official notice applied to claim 1 above, and further in view of admitted prior art. It is take to be admitted prior art that the use PWM devices to provide a current for a central processing unit is conventional in view of paragraph 004 of the specification. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have provided the temperature control of Arslain on PWM devices that provide a current for a central processing unit.
